10 Images of Child Abuse on the Internet

When someone is discovered to have created child pornography, placed child pornography on the Internet, or accessed child pornography, the police should normally consider whether that individual might also be involved in the active abuse of children. In particular, the individual's access to children should be established, within the family and employment contexts and in other settings (e.g. work with children as a volunteer). If there are particular concerns about one or more specific children, there may be a need to carry out section 47 child protection enquiries in accordance with Part 6 of these procedures.
